Fighting Moisture

Did you ever stop to think about why it is good economy to paint the woodwork of your home and keep it protected against the elements? Surely you have not considered it solely as a means of making the place attractive in its appearance, for if that only was the important factor, cheap paint might produce the desired effect.

The great enemy of exposed wood is moisture, which soaks in and gradually causes decay; the prime purpose of paint is to seal the surface that moisture cannot penetrate.

Good paint made from the best weather-proof pigments, mixed with Pure Linseed Oil is the only coating that will adequately give you this protection. Cheap paint may appear to do so but in reality the moisture soaks thru and really does more damage than if the surface was left entirely unpainted.

We offer you Moore's Pure Linseed Oil Paint, it is the best paint that skilled chemists have been able to produce after years of careful study and a complete analysis of what is required to make a paint that will meet the most severe test.

It spreads easily, seals perfectly and gives you complete protection with a beauty and durability that is unsurpassed.

Our prices are low for a quality product, let us estimate your job.

One of the features of the game was a real old-fashioned home run by Doris Church in the fifth inning which brought in three scores.

Following is the line-up in brief, with the runs credited each:
