TO OUR BANKING CUSTOMERS

TV7E, the undersigned banks, are M operating under the Bankers Code of Fair Competition which was drawn up in accordance with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, enacted by the last session of Congress. This Code was approved by the National Recovery Administration and signed by President Roosevelt. Banking institutions thruout the United States are governed by the provisions of this Code.

The Banking Code became effective October 16, 1933. Section 4 and 5 of Article VIII. provides that:—

"The Banking Code Committee shall, subject to the approval of the Administrator, supervise the setting up of Regional Committees * * * for the purpose of assisting the Administrator and the Banking Code Committee in the administration and enforcement of this Code within such local regions. The Committees (local or regional) shall assist the Administrator and the Banking Code Committee in the administration and enforcement of this Code within local areas and shall, subject to the approval of the Administrator and of the Banking Code Committee, adopt local rules and regulations governing competitive practices within local areas."

In accordance with the above provisions of the Code, a committee from the undersigned banks and trust companies has carried out the Code instructions by adapting these regulations so far as permissible to local conditions. These regulations have been approved by the banks and trust companies in this region. A copy has been certified by the State Banking NRA Committee and approved by the National Banking Code Committee and the National Recovery Administrator.

New Regulations Effective January 1

These new regulations, which are mandatory under the Code, become effective January 1st, 1934 for all banks and trust companies in Allegany County, New York. They are designed to further the policy of the President of the United States to restore every business of the country to a profitable basis. which in banking is essential to the maintenance of proper protection for depositors' funds. They embody specific practices for fair competition. They provide certain definite restrictions, such as prohibiting the payment of interest on demand deposits, as set forth in the Banking Act of 1933. They prescribe the maximum rate of interest which can be paid on time deposits, including savings and thrift accounts, and certificates of deposit.

They set forth uniform minimum charges for all banking services rendered by the banks and trust companies in this region. Banks under the law, can no longer render services to a depositor or a customer at a loss. For each and every service rendered it is mandatory that there be adequate and fair compensation. Every account and banking transaction must stand on its

Sound Banking is Code's Objective

All of the provisions and regulations under the Code have one common objective—to strengthen the banking structure of the country. Safe banks are possible only by the rigid and constant application of sound banking principles. A bank which receives proper compensation for regular services rendered is not forced to seek revenue from transactions involving high risk, or to venture in other fields of finance. It is now a well-established rule that a bank, in order to be sound, must not be allowed to operate at a

All of the banks and trust companies in this region are obligated to comply with the provisions of the Banking Code. It is impossible for us to set forth in this announcement all of the new Code regulations under which the banking business is now conducted. Because of this fact, we invite our banking customers to ask us for any further information. Our officers, directors and employees will gladly tell you about any of the details, or charges for services, that you may wish to

The helpful co-operation of the banking public and a full understanding of the new regulations are essential to the successful operation of the Code. The banks of the country are co-operating with the Government in a mutual endeavor to make possible strong, sound, well managed banks and a complete financial service at all times. We are giving our sincere and faithful effort to this end, and we believe our customers and the people
