ARRANGE BIG 4-H PROGRAM

Study and Entertainment Features Congress at Cornell, June 27, 28 and 29.

June 27, 28 and 29 are the biggest days of the year for 4-H club members in New York state, says Professor W. J. Wright, state club leader.

The club congress, he points out, offers a short course of real instruction for club members. Special teaching is given in poultry, livestock, and other fields in which boys and girls are interested.

The program, just announced, includes entertainment along with instruction. The entire group has a rally Wednesday night, a party and dance Thursday night, and special stage entertainment Friday night.

Girls will room at Sage College, a dormitory for University women, and boys in the Baker dormitories for men; both groups eat at Willard Straight Hall, the University's social center.

Aside from transportation cost, $1.50 is charged for the three nights lodging, and about $3.50 is needed for meals; Professor Wright says. Club members will need to bring soap, towels, clothing and some spending money.

New Gasoline Tax Laws in New York

Albany, N. Y.—Gasoline bootlegging in New York will become more difficult under three new laws signed by Governor Lehman. The bills were recommended by the State Tax Commission.

One bill requires wholesale purchasers and sellers of gasoline to keep accurate and complete records, so that shipments of gasoline may be traced. Another increases the penalty for attempts to evade tax payments or to defeat the tax law to a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for one year, or both.

The third law requires the master of any barge, tanker, or other vessel to keep proper records concerning the gasoline shipment in his charge, and that such vessels have the word "gasoline" plainly and visibly displayed on both sides.

Season For Small Fruits Here Plentiful Use Of Them Advised

Red and Black Raspberries, Currants, Gooseberries Among Luscious Fruits Now Arriving on Markets

By CHARLES H. BALDWIN Commissioner, Department of Agriculture and Markets Albany, New York

THIS is the time of the year when small fruits begin to come thick and fast. Raspberries, red and black, currants, gooseberries are arriving on the markets.

Of the many species of currants listed in the fruit catalogues of earlier days, only two are familiar to the present-day consumer.

Being cultivated in a Basket of New York Raspberries white Dutch. Currants formerly were not considered desirable for table eating. They were used for medicinal purposes, for cordials, for wine, and their juice, diluted, was much in favor as a cooling drink.

will be cultivated here for its delicious, tempting flavor.

Both the red and the black raspberries grew wild all over our own land as well as in some parts of Europe. There was no need for the settlers of North America to bring with them the cultivated raspberries from the Old World, for the "woods were full of them" here.

The wild black raspberry is one of the most delectable fruits of the countryside. It is one of the most popular fruits for table use, for preserving and for drying.

From the standpoint of dietetics, the food value, especially vitamin content, of these small fruits is rather negligible. Nevertheless, they occupy an important place on the menu.

It is a well known fact that no meal is complete from the standpoint of healthy and happy satisfaction of appetite without a vegetable and a sour. Red currants, particularly make our mouths water when we remember their sharp tartness, and so are a valuable addition to a meal.

Sometimes it is difficult to provide a healthful sweet for the children. We know there is nothing more healthful and satisfying than fresh fruit and milk. What is more tempting than a dish of raspberries, red or black, covered with thick sweet cream and sugar?

There are any number of other ways to use these small fruits. Pies, tarts, turnovers, jellies—did you ever hear of Gooseberry Fool, that old English dessert? The markets of New York will soon be well supplied. That is the time to buy and put away for winter, as well as to eat your fill of the fresh fruit. If you want to know what to do with them, send a postal card to "Consumers' Information Service, State Department of Agriculture and Markets, Albany, N. Y., and a pamphlet of selected recipes will be sent you.

CROPS AND PASTURES NOW ON UPGRADE

General rains throughout many parts of New York state during the past few weeks have done much to help crops and pasture conditions, according to reports which are sent to Earl Flansburgh, state leader of agricultural county agents, twice a week by county agents.

Hundreds of farmers have been forced to plant emergency hay crops however, and still more are contemplating on such planting. The common millet is recommended as the best emergency crop to plant now.
