worth living?

"A friend in need is a friend indeed," is a famous quotation, found in many autograph albums. Some people still hang to the old saying that a person can be judged by the company he keeps. This, as I have found is not always true.

I like my friends to be happy-golucky, "easy come, easy go" type. I like the type that can take a joke, and see the optimistic, rather than the pessimistic side of life. Who likes the kind who go around weeping, wailing, and wondering what the dear old world is coming to? They should all get together and isolate themselves from the rest of the world. We might progress more rapidly if they were out of the way. I also want some of my friends to be of the loyal type. Those who will stand by one thru thick and thin, no matter what happens. Staunch friends are considered by some a luxury, something that should be looked up to and loved. One's parents should come under the heading of "staunch friends" Loyal friends are few and far between. Friends are something that cannot be replaced. Also, isn't it true, that when one goes to a strange town that the first thing one thinks of is getting acquainted?

Anyway, we know that just "ood les" and "oodles" are one etting acquainted?

There is no doubt that Andover High School has a wonderful football team and consequently there is little doubt about our winning the game from Bolivar Saturday.

Altho a good team is the most essential part in winning a game, school spirit is needed to encourage the players. We must show our school spirit next Saturday by attending the first game of the areason and letting the players hear us shout "BEAT BOLIVAR!!"

-A-H-S---EDITORIAL THE DICTIONARY
By Philip Crandall

By Philip Crandall

Giving quick estimation of the value of a dictionary, most persons would no doubt underestimate its usefulness. It is a plain, ordinary looking book. Perhaps it is our unfortunate practice to guess at the meaning of words. You will be amazed at the number of times the dictionary comes to your aid.

These are some of the circumstances in which you would be lost without a dictionary. If you were writing a letter and didn't know whether you had received or "recieved" the letter, if you had heard a common word pronounced two different ways and you were uncertain which was correct; if you were conversing with an intellectual person and he had spoken a word whose meaning you did not know; if you wanted to abbreviate and didn't know the abbreviation.

These are very common occurrences. Even if you do thines well didn't know the abbreviation.

These are very common occurrences. Even if you do things well in each case, you can make guesswork a certainty by consulting the ever-useful dictionary. In addition to this, the dictionary can be used in some way in every class we attend. For instance, in English for composition work; in a language for derivations and the origin of words; in commercial subjects for the definition of some term with which we

FROM THE PRINCIPAL'S DESK

This week I am begging a little space in the editorial column of the Hi Herald to have an informal chat with all the boys and girls in school and, of course, I have no objections if the parents of these boys and girls tune in too.

By the time this paper comes from the press, you will be completing the third week of your new school year. It is rather important for each of you at this time to take a brief inventory of what you have accomplished so far and consider whither you are travelling.

I have already complimented you whither you are travelling.

I have already complimented you on the very fine way in which you have started your school year. I have found you to be a perfectly normal group of young people, with your own individual natures and temperaments, to be sure, but all responsive to fair play and all filled with that intense desire for experience and knowledge that is so characteristic of youth and about which are centered many of your problems.

acteristic of youth and about which are centered many of your problems.

However, please remember that no matter how valuable a good start may be, you cannot depend on the inertia of this beginning to carry you thru the year. There is no such thing as perpetual motion in school any more than in mechanics. Every machine, regardless of how well it is built, will eventually stop, unless; energy is constantly applied to it. The novelty of a new school year, of new subjects, even of a new principal, will soon wear away. It is then that you will face the grim necessity of applying constant energy to your school work.

Even this has its compensations. A certain Greek philosopher once said: "Difficulties are the things that show what men are." Ahead of you then, lies the testing period. Will you be weighed in the balance and found wanting? The answer lies largely with your own self. May I suggest three responsibilities: First to your lessons. De your daily work well and on time. Spend a little time in study each day outside of school hours.

Second, responsibility to others. No one may do exactly as he pleases. Conduct yourself properly, both in scheel end out, with due consideration for those in whose presence you may be Respect the judgment of the your school and community. Start

Third, you have a responsibility to your school and community. Start the foundations fer a good character here in school. Remember that it is what you are and not who you are that counts. Be loyal to your school, obeying its regulations and supporting its activities. The acceptance of this three-fold responsibility will go far towards insuring a really balanced education.

GUESS WHO? ??

There is a certain boy in the Sophomore Class who is especially distinguished by his freckles. He has brown eyes and abuurn hair which is very curly. He is about five feet six inches tall. He seems to be an agreeable person at all times. He is a rather noisy person and is always laughing, or making others laugh. He seems to get a big kick out of teasing the girls. This boy has the making of a football hero. I'm sure you can all guess who this is for there is none other like him.

I search the nooks and darkest corners of the school rooms to find —you could never guess it—Georgie Joyce and several other little Freshman playing some kind of tag, the object of the game seemed to be to see how many times they could run underneath Eddie Brewsters arms.

This was too much for me, so I looked around to see what else was going on; a bright little beam struck Miss Russ' door so I decided to investigate and what should I find but Mr. McGee teaching commercial law —and Gertie Dean giggling as the she never would stop. However, there seemed to be a few others who felt funny, too, just ask Howard McAndrew.

After a while I tip-toed down to Miss Trenkle's study hall. I dared not make any noise, and there sat "the worst of her worries" right in front of her desk—none other than the right honorable Johnny Cannon.

GREENWOOD (Mrs. H. C. McCaffery, Reporter)

Village Library to be Opened Plans are being made to bring a library back to this village. Feeling that the reading of good books and magazines is a worthwhile use of leisure time, and that it would benefit especially the young people of the school and village, the Greenwood Epworth League has chosen this as a worthy project. It is planned that this shall be a memorial library, in memory of Mrs. Mary D. Young, who did so much for the Greenwood Methodist church and the former library of the village.
Rooms have been obtained in the Orlo Freeland house, and the town of Greenwood is giving their support by paying the rent. This will be started on a small scale, with old books, some of them from the old library, and subscriptions and donations from local sources, together with the State Traveling Library.
The support of the people of the town and the church is desired to make this worthwhile. It is the desire of the young people to have something permanent.
