IT DOES PERCOLATE

Well, it's certainly a relief to think that the mid-year tests are over. No, this isn't another editorial telling you to study. It's just a bit to encourage the teachers.

All of the world's greatest men were once little boys in school. Often they were so troublesome that they seemed a doubtful bargain to their teachers, who grew gray in an effort to teach them just a small amount of what they should know. It seemed a hopeless task. In spite of the fact, those same students proved their worth to the word and those who taught them.

So, teachers, if everything you have said appears to have fallen on deaf ears, we leave this consolation: Some day we shall wake up and hear what you are saying "way back now." In other words, we are rather like the Englishman who laughed in church at a joke he had heard on Friday.

GOOD ENGLISH

Have you ever stopped to realize that your use of English grammar tells the other people around you your characteristics? Your friends have undoubtedly noticed that—therefore if you use poor English, you should start immediately to improve it.

In the business world of today the use of good English is essential to a person if he wishes to make a success in life. Through business letters, the person to whom the letters are written can practically tell whether or not the writer is capable and intelligent.

Therefore if a person wishes to make himself an important character in the business world he must be able to use good English.

BOE ZECKELY COLUMN

Dear Boe:

I'm just a lonely little Sophomore boy from Elm Valley. Boe, please tell me how I can be more popular with the girls. I want to social hour to learn to dance in the hope that that would make a difference, but without success.

—Lonesome BILL

Dear "Lonesome Bill":

I really don't see why a nice boy like you doesn't make a hit with the girls. However, it is probably because you can't dance and I'm sure that if you continue going to the social hour you will become more popular. Try it and let me know how you make out.

GUESS WHO?

Stepping into the Freshman class I find it has many interesting students. This one is dark and rather short. He often causes a disturbance in the study hall. This person gets along very well with the feds and is well liked by all.

Come on, think, and guess who this person is!

Answer to last week's Guess Who: Edna Joyce.

ANDOVER DEFEATS CUBA HIGH SCHOOL

The A. H. S. cagers won their tenth victory of the season by defeating Cuba Tuesday night, January 28th, on the latter's court by a score of 28-20.

Early in the first quarter Andover got away to a six point lead, but, after a few minutes of play Cuba closed up the gap. However, Andover soon rolled up another lead which they held thruout the game. The half ended with the score 16-8 in Andover's favor.

Andover kept well ahead of its opponents during the second half and at no time was their wide margin of victory in danger.

A noticeable feature of the game was the fact that Andover had no substitutes thruout the entire game. Fulkerson was high scorer for the purple and white, making a total of 13 points. McGill and Kemp also played good games both defensively and offensively.

!!The Spotlight!!

Believe it or not, but G. Schoonover had an escort to school during her exams. Perhaps Howard B. thought it might encourage you, Gertie!

We hope Marilla I is still "hibernating" in "them thar snowbanks at Tip Top." We also hope that we will see her smiling face soon again.

Here is an interesting article—I have found out why Phil L. is so discouraged. "Liz" has the epidemic and so he can't see her.

Instead of looking at Doris H., Jackie McD. is now gazing at L. Teribury. How you change, Jackie.

Eddie Alderson has been a caller lately at a certain person's home on Water street. Now, Eddie, tsk, tsk!

Jo Baker is busy these days trying to answer all those letters from Hornell.

M. B. is turning his affection towards his cousin. Now guess who the cousin might be.

Kennie Vars has at last a true dream. As you know, Kenzie is going to be an aviator, and he has an airplane. A new one! Don't let me kid you—it's only a toy one!

C. Dolan is wondering why a certain person doesn't "come up and see her sometime." Well, C. D., that is because he has a cousin that lives next door.

Fifth period study hall resembles a zoo. Cause—noises. Perpetrators—two P. G.'s. Curious?—Come in and hear them sometime.

Who is this mysterious "Herbey" from Allentown? Ask R—!!!

It is a mighty good thing that James L. has a truck. Did you know that he has to cart a certain girl's fiddle and books to school? Well, he does.

From the way it sounds, I believe that Joe McAndrew is going to be an "amateur." Joe's sister, Susan, sang over the radio, and did very nicely. Joe says that she takes right after her brother. Oh well, Joe, that's only human, don't all the girls?

What is this I hear about a Leap Year dance? I shall have to look into this, and see what it's all about!

Attention, Everyone! One of these days you are going to see the Glee Club perform, and you will certainly think it's the U. S. Navy performing when you see them in their new "bibs and tuckers." Keep on the watch, my friends!

As I am giving the inside dope on the school activities, I might as well tell you that the Senior play is to be a success. Of course, we must compliment the characters, and also the coaches!

I must sign off and I'll be back next week with more information to all.

Good bye now,

THE SPOTLIGHT

GRADE ONE-B TO START MONDAY

If at all possible, parents should accompany their children to the school building on Monday to give the necessary information needed in registering the pupils.

HUMOROUS HAPPENINGS

While the Freshman class was wondering why the bell didn't ring at the regular time Tuesday morning, Louis Dodge made the scientific suggestion "Maybe it's frozen up."

It would seem that Louis is developing powers of observation and reason. Keep up the good work, Louis!

CONGRATULATIONS

The first we knew of a leap year affair between Clyde and Marion was when Miss Day called Clyde Briggs by his new name, Clyde Burgett. Clyde and Marion, who were sitting next to each other, seemed quite upset to think their secret had been discovered. At any rate were their faces red?

In Science class Mr. Host asked Montrose which would weigh more, a quart of warm water or a quart of cold water. Montrose said "The quart of hot water would be lighter because it is heavier."

"PRINCE"

By Jean Mills, Spangh

Chapter I.

"Prince" was one of those huge St. Bernard dogs which make their homes in lonely monasteries high in the Swiss Alps. A friend to all mountain travelers, Prince was noted for his bravery and daring, while he also featured in the rescue of many a tourist who had been lost in the blizzards so characteristic of the Swiss Alps. Many people owe their lives to Prince, and the lives of their friends. He lived in a lonely monastery, located on the mountain that was traversed the most by people from abroad, who knew practically nothing about mountain climbing. One night, in particular, will be remembered by the monks in this certain monastery.

It was cold, dark and stormy outside, without so much as a star to guide the weary traveler on his way. The wind whistled dismally around the house, making windows creak and doors rattle. The monks had received word that day that they could expect visitors at about nightfall. A group of tourists had started on their way up the mountain at about 10 o'clock that morning, and they would reach their destination about supper time. It was then almost 10:30 in the evening and still no travelers appeared. What had happened?

Prince's master paced back and forth in front of the fireplace, with grave concern written all over his face. There certainly must be something decidedly wrong. The clock struck eleven.

Prince and another dog whom we shall call "Bing" were sent into the terrific storm to find the tourists. The two dogs were fully equipped with all the necessary articles for just such an expedition, and with a word of good luck and the oft-heard command to do their best, they were off into the storm like a bolt of lightning.

What a dreary, lonesome wait for the monks in the lonely monastery. How loudly sounded the strokes of the clock; one, two and three, still no tourists or dogs. The hours dragged slowly by, one by one, each minute seeming an hour. Suddenly, above the whining and the groaning of the wind there was heard joyous shouts and glad "Hurrahs!" Could this be the lost party of tourists?

The shouts came closer, mingled with the bark of the dogs. The party was promptly ushered into the monastery where food and dry clothing was given to all the members of the party.

Bing also came around for his usual reward, a huge piece of delicious juicy steak, but where was Prince? Surely as faithful and smart a dog as Prince had proved himself to be couldn't get lost in a minor snow squall like this one. But in vain, were all the shouts, calls and whistles; no Prince made his appearance. Where could he be?
