Says Quagga Is Extinct;

Creature Once Plentiful

Beyond all doubt the quagga is utterly extinct, in the opinion of Dr. Graham Renshaw, British naturalist.

This beautiful South African creature resembled in proportions a stout pony. With rufous brown body changing to fulvous posteriorly, its head was striped with brown in zebra fashion. Its neck was banded with broad stripes which continued along the body to the haunches, where they broke up into vague lines and spots. The legs and tail were white.

Only 16 in all were ever transported alive to Europe and two of these happened to a smart equipage in London attracted much attention in the middle of the Seventeenth century.

In its day, writes Doctor Renshaw in the Journal of the British Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire, the quagga graced the South African veldt in almost unbelievable numbers.

Unhappily, it was scarcely known before it began to vanish. Thomas Pringle, the South African poet and a friend of Sir Walter Scott, lamented in 1820 that the quaggas and hartbeests had almost totally disappeared from the pastures of Albany which they had formerly enlivened with their numbers. By 1836 it only occurred in Cape Colony on the borders though still plentiful further north; in 1859 the hide-hunting Boers began to exterminate the game for their skins and the last two quaggas of the Great Karoo desert were shot in 1865.

THE HI HERALD

and strode over to Mr. White's side to take his temperature and pulse. He looked up at Mrs. White who was very anxious to know about her husband and shook his head. Mrs. White said "Will he be all right, doctor?"

"I'm afraid he won't pull thru," Mrs. White, replied the doctor, "as he's had a severe attack, it's going to go hard, but I'll do my best to save him." Mrs. White thought she should call the children from school but they would be home within an hour anyway. It would be easier for Mr. White to rest if it were more quiet. Doctor Cross busied himself with the patient and took out medicines and gazed at their labels. When he left he explained to Mrs. White about the medicines and said he would call again that evening to learn of Mr. White's condition.

It was about four o'clock and the house was very quiet. Mrs. White kept close watch by her husband to see that nothing would happen again. All at once she heard a car door slam, she heard Joyce talking and she knew that Joyce and Ted had arrived from school. Joyce walked into the house and exclaimed, "Hello, mother; did you know it is raining out of doors?"

Mrs. White only replied: "Sh-h," because she had not even looked out of doors within the last hour.

"Please be more quiet, Joyce, for your father is ill. The doctor just left. Where is Ted?"

"He's putting water in the radiator of the car," replied Joyce. "I'll call him."

Joyce stepped to the door and motioned to Ted who hurriedly came in. He seemed to be dazed when Mrs. White told him about the happenings of the last hour. Joyce and

Ted looked at each other but didn't say a word. They were both thinking of the same thing—what would they do if anything happened to father? (To Be Continued)

SEND IN YOUR

Laffs

To This Paper and They Will be Published Weekly

Submitted by JENNIE HAMMOND, Andover, N. Y.

Little Julia's sister was ill, and she was told to go and thank Mrs. Hogg's a neighbor, for sending flowers to the hospital.

"Mother sends the condiments of the season, and I was to thank you for the flowers," exclaimed Julia.

"That's all right," replied Mrs. Hogg. "What is the matter with your sister?"

"Doctor says she has a coat on her tongue, and an ulcer in her stomach," was the startling reply.

The prospective groom (gayly): "Will it take much to feather a nest?"

Furniture Dealer: "Only a little down."

A naval officer fell overboard and was rescued by a deck hand. The officer asked his preserver how he could reward him.

"The best way, sir," said Jack, "is to say nothing about it. If the other fellows knew I pulled you out, they'd chuck me in."

Doctor: "When did you first suspect that your husband was not right mentally?"

Mrs. Jones: "When he shook the hall tree and began feeling around on the floor for apples."

Visitor, to bride: "Are you not getting tired of studio life?"

Artist's Bride: "Good gracious no. It's most interesting. Jack paints and I cook. Then the game is to guess what the things are meant for."

Will: "Just think of it! Brown has married Miss Gridley!"

Phil: "I thought he was only flirt ing with her."

Will: "So did he."
