STORING VEGETABLES Arthur J. Pratt

Keeping vegetables from the home garden for winter use is one way to save; those who have no garden may still save by buying fruits and vegetables at relatively lower price in the fall and keep them for later use when prices are higher. Good vegetables can be kept in good condition for a long time with the proper temperature right degree of humidity or and the exceptions. in the air. With few vegetables keep best at a tempera-ture of about 32 degrees F. Reof crops and leafy vegetables require high degree of humidity. The best storage conditions for nly stored may summarized as follows:

Cool and moist—beets, carrots, parsnips, salsify, turnips, winter radshes, and celery.

Cool and moderately moist—cabbage and potatoes. The atmosphere should be moist, but not moist enough to allow accumulation of water in drops upon the stored product. Cool and dry-onions and dry

Warm and dry-squashes, pu

kins and sweet potatoes.

A dirt floor usually provides more moisture in the air than a concrete cellar floor, and sprinkling the cellar floor helps to provide enough moisture in many cellars. Before storing vegetables, sort out carefully and discard any that are diseased or
