Fillmore and Wellsville Tied for Second Place in Octagon League

With Fillmore defeating Wellsville by a score of 4 to 3 at Fillmore Saturday, and the other teams forfeiting postponed games to Fillmore, the second half of the Octagon Baseball League stands at a tie between Fillmore and Wellsville, each team having lost one game.

The play-off of the tie will take place Saturday afternoon at Belmont under the present plans.

The play-off series between the leaders of the two sections of the schedule which was slated to start last Sunday at Belfast, had to be postponed until this Sunday on account of the tie.

The winners of Saturday's game will play the Belfast team, winners of the first half, at Belfast, Sunday, in the first game of the "Little World Series."

Home Bureau Meeting

Mrs. Peter Joyce entertained the Home Bureau at her home Monday. It was an all-day meeting, the morning being taken up with a lesson on "Christmas Suggestions." The county box of suggestions, which is brought to each unit, was presented by the leaders, Mrs. Charles Ruger and Mrs. Harold Emery. A tureen dinner was enjoyed at 12:30.

At 2 o'clock a business meeting was held and different patterns were cut from the Christmas suggestions box. The answer to roll call was a Christmas suggestion also.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. William Pease, Thursday, Oct. 1st. The lesson will be "Prevention of Colds," with Mrs. Dewey Northrup as leader.

"Poor Circulation" Mostly Tired Nerves

So many people come to see me, telling me, among other things, that they have "poor circulation." The reasons for this mistaken idea is because their feet are more or less numb, with "creepy" sensations, tingling and almost invariably cold, or uncomfortably cool. These symptoms they ascribe to poor circulation.

True, it feels just like that; feels as if the blood could not get thru the tissues fast enough, and was trying to force its way—which isn't the case at all; those tiny blood-vessels may be as open as they ever were, with the pulse rate and arterial pressure normal. The coldness, tingling and numbness, however, will bring the "poor circulation" opinion every time, when the patient tells me about the failing legs, or arms below the elbows.

It's a nerve proposition every time. When the brain and spinal cord become very tired, fagged, weary from long over-taxing, the twigs of the nerves farthest from the centres will manifest their exhaustion by lack of healthy function. To prescribe a heart tonic for such a condition when it only needs rest, would be stupid. The general tonic may be useful and, particularly, the nerve tonic, which, however, is only supplemental to the first requirement—rest for the brain and cord.

If those leg symptoms are accompanied by high blood pressure, it is extremely necessary that the patient consult his physician at once—and it isn't "poor circulation" even in this emergency; it's still a nerve-proposition that caused the feeling, tho the circulation may be running riot.

Washing Woolens

Fall weather means woolen clothing, but wool clothes often spell disaster unless they are washed and dried, or otherwise cleaned and pressed carefully.

According to the New York State College of Home Economics, unless a person is perfectly sure of the methods used and probable results, it is safer to send a good woolen garment to a reputable dry cleaner than to try home methods. But practice makes perfect in laundering and it is possible to experiment on older garments about to be discarded.

One of the first "don'ts" about laundering wool: Don't allow garments to become too dirty. The "do's" are: wash them frequently, shake them, brush them well to remove dust, and use extra suds to remove any hard-water scum.

The exact method to wash a woolen garment is: After shaking it to remove dust, dissolve some mild soap flakes in boiling water, using about one tablespoon of soap flakes to a basin of water. For hard water, use more soap. Add enough cold water to cool the solution to lukewarm. Douse the garment up and down in the suds, allowing the soap bubbles to penetrate the material. Do not pull, rub or twist the garment when washing it. Rinse it after each washing in cold water of the same temperature, and wash it until the water is thoroughly clean. Do not skimp on rinsing, especially with white woolens. Treat the garment carefully when it is dried, so that the colors do not have a chance to run. Use old towels to take up excess moisture, putting a towel between each fold of the garment. Take out the towels and shake the garment to remove any moisture; then, if possible, hang it up to dry in an airy, shady place, or lay it in shape on towels in a breezy place. While slightly damp, press the garment on the wrong side, through another cloth for protection.

SAGAS OF THE SKIES

By R. C. Oestel
Manager, Aviation Division, Sales Department
Colonial Esso Marketers

TWO thousand feet above Boston Harbor, Pilot Charles W. Sutherland turned in his seat to grin at his auburn-haired passenger. The grin died on his lips. The girl, an attractive young woman of twenty-two, was almost out of the plane. She had unfastened her safety belt, ripped off her helmet and goggles and, with her hair flying free in the breeze, was stepping out on to the wing of the plane. One foot was already on the wing of the plane. The other was lifted from the floor of the cockpit. There was a wild look on her face.

The pilot let go of the stick, ripped off his safety belt, and made a lunge for the girl's hair. He caught it and yanked her back into the cockpit. The plane whirled crazily. In the swirling, twisting plane the girl fought savagely, kicking and clawing at the pilot. But he hung on grimly. The plane, with no hand to guide it, careened towards the earth. A quick glance over the side warned the pilot that a crash was inevitable unless he brought the falling ship under immediate control. There was only one thing to do. He planted a well-directed left fist against the crazed woman's jaw, and she slumped into the cockpit. Still holding her hair with his right hand, in case she should try to jump again, Sutherland grabbed the controls with his left hand and brought the ship to a perfect dead stick landing at the East Boston airport.
