Even the proverbial worm occasionally turns on his oppressor. A striking example of this occurred recently when a pet rabbit saw a Missouri copperhead crawling into his cage. When the reptile was part way thru the wire and couldn't defend himself, the bunny leaped on his enemy and kicked him to death.

THE HI HERALD

and mother went together and the four children shopped in different places. Harold, the smallest boy, was getting presents for his brother and sisters, and father and mother.

He got home with his presents and went straight to his room and done up all of the packages.

He was admiring how nice he had done them up for a six year old boy, when he noticed that he hadn't put any names on them. He thought he knew who they belonged to.

He put the names on them and set them under the tree.

Christmas morning all were up bright and early, even baby June. Father opened his present and he got a baby bottle. Mother found in her package a doll's sewing outfit. John got a bottle of perfume and June a gun and Mary Ann a pipe.

All were laughing at their presents, but Harold didn't know why such a mistake could have happened. Finally, after all the packages were opened, Harold told them how the mistake was made. They all laughed and declared it was the happiest Christmas that they had ever had.

"A Christmas Surprise"

L. Callaghan

Molly was eight years old, and as it neared Christmas, worried constantly about what she was to get. Nearly every day, she would come running into the house, shaking snow in every direction and ask her mother questions about her presents.

After doing this several times a day, she was told that they were going to her grandpa's farm for Christmas. When she heard this, Molly was more worried than ever, because she wouldn't be here to show her presents to her dearest playmate, Sally Ann.

Christmas morning, Molly woke up early and ran to look at her presents. She danced around the tree until breakfast time, when she went to eat. That morning her grandpa came to take them to the farm. After the long ride thru the country, everyone was ready to eat, but after the dinner they all had other ideas. After dinner, Molly went out in the kitchen where her father and grandfather were. She looked into a box and saw four tiny puppies, snuggled together on a blanket.

Molly played with them and just before they went home, grandpa handed her a box. At home she opened it and saw the tiny, black puppy which she had liked the most.
