Pays to Plan Barn Wiring

Make Provision for New Appliances and Uses, armers Are Told.

A thought in time saves wiring and money in equipping a dairy barn for electricity, Morris H. Lloyd of the Niagara-Hudson Power Company told a Farm and Home Week au-dience at Cornell. dience at Cornell. A dairyman has to plan for future additions so that pan for future additions so that the wiring service can handle the larger power load safely and effici-ently, he said.

"The most obvious use lighting. The stable should have at least one light in back of every five cows, and one light in front of every More efficient feeding of dairy seven, so no work will have to be cattle and the use of more homedone in the shadows. A light begrown roughages have a prominent place on the program.

Dairymen one in each box stall is also needed." Switches rather than pull cha.ns are preferred, as they last longer and are more convenient, he said Reflectors are better than guards for protection. Lights in the haymow, and over ladders and chutes make work better and safer to do.

The wiring should be large enough to allow large electric motors to be used, for the water pump, clippers. and milkers, and to operate the hay hoist, feed grinder, and ensilage cut-ter. An electric heater or dairy utensil scalder may also be a desired

Non-metallic sheathed cable recommended for lasting wiring in the barn, and should be used for in-terior stable wiring, added Mr. Lloyd. "To be sure of an adequate plan, the farmer should ask the rural service representative of his power company to prepare wiring specifi-cations for the installation."

Agrigraphs

Sweet potatoes are now being used to make starch for industrial purposes, particularly for the sizing of cotton cloth.

Bees sent in packages from the south are useful for starting new colonies and for uniting with meak colonies to bring them up to full strength.

Many New York dairymen that their simple, well planned, home built stable ventilation systems are the best investments they ever made.
