LAST WINTER TRIP OUT (Continued from First Page) In late March we ordered my reservation from Harrington Harbour to Rimouski (on the south shore of the St. Lawrence River, on the Gaspe Peninsula). From there the north coast is served by a government mail plane fairly regularly twice a month during winter, or when the ice is solid enough to make a safe landing field. On April 8 I would be leaving the scene of our very interesting winter experience, unique, problematic at times, unforgettable—that is, I would if that last plane would come as scheduled. Even the eighth of April is a late date for finding solid ice. Yes, "she" will come, according to the loquacious telegraph wires, (bless them) which spread generous reports from one fishing settlement to another—of both facts and fancy. The day was fine. I sat all day packed up, ready to leave the house at once when the purr of motors should come out of the west. Saturday the same. And as those two fine days went so, too, did the ice go in many passes and bays. Reports from all sides told us that the threshold from winter to spring must soon be crossed. Perhaps I could not leave until the first steamer came. Sunday and Monday were boisterous days, not good for flying. Their near-zero temperatures lent encouragement, however. Tuesday, April 12, was to be my day, so came the word to me in early morning and to Fred Cox who must have his part on the ice, well loaded with gas and oil for quick service to the air plane motors. It was after 5 p. m. that "she" finally came and I embarked upon the last chapter of my Labrador winter amidst the kindly farewells of a large gathering of friends all as they stood there on the ice, flanked on three sides by fish houses, coffee "fakes," beached boats, lobster traps, flying posts, killocks and many other things which are vital elements of their coastwise existence. The details of that trip, my first with wings, would make too long a story. Only a few may be mentioned here those which have to do with winter. The trip from Harrington Harbour to Rimouski would require from six to seven hours continuous flying. As it was reached Rimouski Saturday noon. The first leg of the journey was 150 miles. As the sun had dropped below the horizon before we reached Natashquan, we spent the night there. An hour's flying Wednesday morning brought us to Havre St. Pierre. While taking off there, with the runway over very rough ice, the rear landing gear was damaged, so all out for repairs. A 24-hour delay was promised. It stretched into three days. Saturday at 6 a. m. we flew along that rocky wild north country, with the still wilder hinterland looming up at our right and the majestic St. Lawrence, fast breaking her winter fetters, at our left. After an hour's stop at Seven Islands we crossed the river to the Gaspe Coast. A two-hour stop was made at Val Breeland where the plane's winter "shoes" or runners were exchanged for the summer wheels. These were necessary in order to make the Rimouski landing, where both snow and ice were gone. That Val Breeland takeoff came all too near being a "flop." The mid-day sun had softened up that ice landing field so much that before we got into the air the wheels plowed in nearly to the hubs—and stalled. Some shoveling of ice and rocking of plane brought about a speedy takeoff and Romouski soon lay beneath us. All hands at the airport were greatly relieved that their winter flying schedule was ended. The between-season flying gets their nerves! To me the most remarkable and awe-inspiring feature of the trip was one which can never be mine to experience again—at no other place, at no other time of year. The panorama of winter breaking up in that intricate waterway—the Gulf and River St. Lawrence with its hundreds of bays, islands and inflowing streams—can never be adequately pictured, and must not be attempted now. Ten hours by fast train from Rimouski to Montreal—and so homebound with a few stops en route. GRANGE NEWS Edith M. Thorne, Lecturer A good time was enjoyed by all who attended Grange Wednesday evening. The occasion was that of Bolivar Grange coming to Andover to put on a program with the theme "The Federal Constitution." There were also guests present from Hallport, Alfred and Inavale. After the program and meeting a social hour was enjoyed by nearly 100 Patrons of Husbandry. The following program was presented by Bolivar Grange in a pleasing manner, under the efficient leadership of Clara E. Crandall, lecturer: Musical selection, "The Star-Spangled Banner," with tableaux, Bolivar Grange orchestra. Invocation, "George Washington's Prayer for the United States," by Mrs. Lucian Lewis. Presentation of book, "The Story of the Constitution." Grange Peace Song, followed by the Preamble to the Constitution in concert. Reading, "The Judiciary," by Mrs. John Cartwright. Piano solo, "Federal March," written for the occasion of the signing of the Constitution in 1787, Mrs. Genevieve Ingalls. Reading, "And Our Posterity," from address by Sol Bloom, Mrs. Lulu Newton. Musical recitation, "The Red, the White, and the Blue," Gloria Tripp—Mrs. Ingalls, pianist. Contest, "True or False Questions on the Constitution." Skit, "Sports of the Season." The pageant of the Grange, by 22 Bolivar members. Andover Grange will take the book, "The Story of the Constitution," to Friendship Grange Wednesday evening, May 4th, putting on a suitable program. There will be Grange practice Saturday night at 8 o'clock. The juveniles will practice at 7. The members of the Grange are requested to meet in the basement of the M. E. church Sunday evening at 7:15, to attend the community service and give Judge Hopkins, a brother Granger, a glad hand.
