Ways to Prevent a "Field Day" Suggested by Plant Scientists

Field beans for the New York State farmer mean a field day for diseases and insects, and a loss for the grower unless he can find a way to control these pests. Once a disease-causing organism is in the soil, it is virtually impossible to get rid of it, but the planting of resistant varieties of field bean make possible a profitable crop. Other controls, particularly disease free seed, will also help to raise the average of production and decrease the loss from disease. Among the new varieties on the market are Wells Red Kidney, the White Imperial, and the Perry Marrow, which are especially resistant to anthracnose. The Robust Pea Bean, which has been grown for several years is immune to mosaic and also somewhat resistant to bacterial blight and root rot. Descriptions of these and other diseases of the field bean, and of insect pests, and ways to control them are given in a revised Cornell bulletin written by college specialists. For a free copy, send a post card to the Office of Publications, College of Agriculture, Roberts Hall, Ithaca, N. Y., and ask for bulletin E-58. Sometimes horses are thin in flesh because of irregularities of the teeth, which prevents thorough grinding of the feed.

Many Opportunities For Good Fishing In This Section

R. E. Shaff Tells of the State Fish Experiment on Wiscoy Creek and Benefits To Villages. I read your article in the "Wandering Willie" column in the News the other day about the Andover Rod and Gun Club and I sure think the writer of that article was justified in giving this project a little free advertising, tho he did have to stretch a point in so doing. I went up the other day to look over the pet trout stream called Wiscoy Creek, running from the Genesee river near Fillmore up thru the villages of Wiscoy, Pike and Bliss. This stream has been touted all over, not only in the east but wherever the sporting magazines go, as the nearest ideal trout fishing in the State of New York and I am not sure but that it ranks up with the best. This stream has been a pet experiment of the State Conservation Department and therefore is being watched as to the reaction of the fishermen and the people in general, both local and otherwise. We talked with the natives of that section and also some of the fishermen, besides personally wandering some few miles of Wiscoy's banks with a fish pole in our hands. These are some of the reactions: The natives living there seem to be mostly in favor of the experiment. Of course some of them owning property along this stream, like others, have an axe to grind because of the few people who parade a stream of that kind that are lacking in so many of the principles that go to make up a sportsman that even a skunk will walk away out of his way to let them by. Well, outside of these few fellows, who mostly carry a little too much liquid bait inside their diaphragm, the land owners seem to like the experiment. At least one of the farmers whose land borders the stream has improved a road from the highway to the stream and has a good place for you to park at the stream, and you may drive down via this private drive for the sum of 30 cents per car. I was told by a native of the village of Wiscoy that on the evening day the license check for game officials totalled 1,500. Now mind you, if this was so, and I can believe it was after seeing the trail along both sides of the stream well worn by the prints of boots, it looks like they "got something there." The community of Pike, especially the restaurants, seem to be well satisfied in feeding these people that are called there and therefore have been a boon to the eating and refreshment establishments. Yet mind you, I saw only one empty whiskey bottle cast one side in several miles of stream. There are several miles of the most beautiful trout stream I have ever seen, some of it is as nature has fashioned it, but several sections have been rebuilt by the State and ideal places for fish to find a home have been provided. These places, in spite of the thousands that have diligently tried to win the farming inhabitants away, still were occupied as I found out by knocking at their door with a nice juicy bait. I am sure that there are ample opportunities for the people of this community to get behind the local Rod and Gun Club and help to make the conservation of fish, game birds and all the things that go along with conservation a success in our community.

Superphosphate is needed on all pastures. When the land is too acid to grow clover, superphosphate alone will not suffice, and lime should also be used.

Attend Tri-County Grange Meeting

Mrs. H. S. Thorne, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Schoonover, daughters Dorothy and Gertrude, Howard Barney, Miss Lenna Church, Carroll Burdick, Louis Dodge, Coretha Mead and Jean Northrup attended a tri-county Grange meeting at Dansville, Monday night. An officer from each of the Livingston county Granges filled the chairs and conducted a model Grange. The Wyoming county Granges put on the degree work and drill. The Andover people had a part on the program by putting on a tableau and reading, "The Triune of American Democracy." Dr. Earl Bates of Cornell University was the principal speaker. About 600 attended the meeting with deputies present from Monroe, Steuben and Genesee counties.
