COMMENCEMENT

The definition that the dictionary gives of Commencement is: The annual festival when degrees are conferred at colleges or in high schools. But commencement means more than that alone. It means the beginning of a youth into an all together different life than that which he has been accustomed to. In one sense commencement is a time when the joys and happiness of graduation time are being carried out, but in another sense it is saying farewell to the teachers and fellow students who have done so much in making our high school career a happy one. Commencement means a great deal to us all during the twelve long years of hard work in school, we look forward to the time when we will receive our diplomas, but after all, when one looks back over those years, one finds it well worth our effort. Knowing that we have obtained a high school education which will be of great use to us in our lives.
