I Pick 'em Up
TRUE STORIES OF HITCH HIKERS
by L. ELLISEVONS

KANGAROO COURT

Tramping around the country makes bums of some boys and is not an enriching experience for others. In the course of their travels they have funny experiences along with their troubles.

"Where are you going?" I asked a weather beaten young fellow as I picked him up in a southern state.

"Mister," he replied, "I am going back to the old home town. I have had enough of knocking around the country."

"Sounds to me as though the going has been a little rough," I said "how about it, the prodigal son returning to the family fireside?"

"Something like that," he hesitated as though I had touched a tender spot.

"Well, come on now and tell me something about it; I am old enough to be your father and you know confession is good for the soul."

Encouraged by my friendly attitude he soon began to tell me of his ups and downs. Just a farm boy who had tired of small town life and started to "see the world" as many others had done before and many will do in the days to come.

"You seem like a regular guy," he said and told me of his travels.

"When I first started out, I got in quite a few rough spots before I learned the ropes. I was caught hopping a freight in North Carolina and spent some time in a road gang for vagrancy. Many a night I spent under a tree and one cold night I crawled into a hole in a hay stack and when I woke up in the morning there was a pig along side of me."

"Did your travels make a hobo of you?" I inquired.

"Well it almost got me, but I was to see some things that my common sense told me would only be my lot, if I went along that way, so I am going home."

Then he told me what decided him.

"I was knocking around and happened to be in West Virginia. It seems the cops were rounding up all panhandlers and fellows with no homes in sight. I was caught with some others and locked up in the jail in Charleston, the capital of the state. I had three dollars at the time, more than I had had for a long while."

"This was the beginning of me coming to my senses. They put me in a cell to stay over night. The cells opened into a corridor and they would allow the fellows to walk in this corridor. There were about twenty hobos, mostly old-timers who had forgotten what a home looked like. As soon as I came in one of them hollered out 'Kangaroo Court in session.' He repeated this a number of times and all the guys came out and stood around me. Then he made a make believe court with a judge and jury lawyers and everything. They made up some phoney charge against me. They seemed to know I had a few dollars, so of course they said I was guilty and fined me a dollar. They did this until I was broke and when another prisoner was brought in they did the same thing. The money was put in the 'kitty' and the guard would buy cigarettes for the gang."

"The next morning we were brought before a local judge and there was a hobo who had on a big coat with pockets like bags. They were bulged out on both sides until he looked like some balloon. The judge looked at him and asked him what kind of pockets he had. They're my C. A. pockets, Judge," he said and then the judge made him empty them. He had everything, bread, sausage, a jar of jam, can opener, fork and spoon, so much stuff that it almost filled a table. The judge said, 'sixty days without board.'"

"That was the time I came to my senses and my luck was with me, because I recognized the judge that I had been with when they had a carnival for the benefit of the police pension fund. When I told him about that he let me off. Mister, I am going home, while the going is good. By the way, those C. A. pockets meant 'carry all' and they sure did."

Belmont Minister Has Narrow Escape

By means of clear thinking and agility on the part of Vic Wilkins of Belmont, Rev. J. B. Ennis of the Methodist church of Belmont is driving about in his car. Rev. Ennis was calling on his daughter, Mrs. Lynn Mead living on a farm across the Erie tracks. It was on his return trip at the exact moment of passing over the tracks that either a crossing board flew up or else something underneath the car dropped down, holding it directly in the path of the mid-day local that was at the time whistling for the crossing above town.

As good fortune would have it, Vic Wilkins, shingling his nearby gas station, heard the frightened minister's outcries and rushing to his assistance, took in the situation at a glance. Grabbing a robe from the car, he ran up the tracks and succeeded in waving the train to a stop only a few rods distant from the impaled machine.—Belmont Dispatch.
