FOLETTI IS PRODUCT OF COUNTRY TOWN

Judge Charles Foletti, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, is a typical example of the boy from the country who made good.

Like so many other leaders in public service and business, Judge Foletti is a product of a country town. He was born in Barre, Vermont, thirty-five years ago, of poor but honest and hard-working parents. His father, a farmer, was a center, respected and universally liked, after completing high school in Barre. Judge Foletti worked his way through Harvard College and Harvard Law School. He also won a scholarship which gave him a year's study at the University of Madrid, Spain. He was formerly counsel to Governor Lehman and more recently a justice of the Supreme Court.

Judge Foletti was married in 1934 to Miss Jean Knox Ellis, of Buffalo, N. Y. The ceremony being performed by the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of the Riverside Memorial Church in New York City of which the Folettis are members. Judge Foletti is a Baptist. He has one daughter.

and jumped back and bumped against the smiling Jack o' Lantern. Then she found a cup of milk by each plate and putting her head down into one cup, drank it all.

Suddenly the cat heard a terrible noise. The children ran into the room, blowing horns. The cat was so frightened she could hardly move and when the children came running over to the table she leaped to the top of the Jack o' Lantern and dug her sharp claws into him.

The children shouted with joy to see a black cat at their party and they thought that a witch had brought her. They petted her and gave her some milk to drink and when she had finished her milk she lay down at mother's feet and went to sleep. Mother said that they might keep her and they decided to call her "Witch," because they thought that was a good name for a Hallowe'en cat.

Another Story for Our Readers

From the short stories penned by the English III class last week, the following has been selected as well worth your time:

A FEW SURVIVE

Early in the gray mist of the dawn Red Smith and Howard Algiers awoke to the sound of a bugle sharply blowing. There was a groan as Red, groping his way to his partner's cot, cracked his shin against an army rifle, propped close to the side of the pup tent.

"Roll out, Hod; you aren't a privileged character, now," Red ordered, as he pulled his friend out of bed. "We go over the top today, you know."

"Shut up an' go 'way," came the muffled retort as Hod tried to draw away from the younger private's grasp.

Just then a gray form was silhouetted in the dimness of the tent opening and a gruff voice commanded: "Better get a move on, you boys, before Captain Dennis comes 'round."

"Yes, sir," was the quick reply as both privates scrambled into night gear.

A half hour later, a troop of soldiers could be seen marching out upon the plain in the lightning dawn. Several of the figures could be seen shivering in the cold air and the sound of grumbling voices could be heard in the stillness of the morning.

"Gosh, the air's cold this morning," shivered Red with chattering teeth, to no one in particular.

"Well, you're not the only one who knows it," was the retort of the private ahead of him, rubbing his chilled hands together.

"Quiet back there!" the sizzling order was heard, "We'll soon be on the outskirts of the German forces."

Silence was instantaneous and only the thump, thump of the soldiers' boots could be heard and once in a while muffled of a cough broke the stillness.

Suddenly a shot rang out in the advance of the troop and bedlam broke loose as the soldiers scattered, finding sheltered spots from which they returned the fire. The battle was on. Now and then a scream would shatter the air as a soldier fell, seriously injured. The clack of loading and reloading the guns could be heard now and then or the muffled boom of a cannon as it went off.

The day wore on, and as twilight deepened into night the firing ceased with only a scattered shot now and then.

A soft whisper was heard as a wounded man returned to consciousness to see a private bending over him.

"Red, is it you?" Hod asked as he knelt over his buddy.

"Yes, pal; they got me in the side," was the tremulous reply and then a curse as he tried to move.

"Never mind, I'll carry you," his comrade returned as he lifted the wounded private and started towards camp. "It could have been worse," was his only comment as they arrived at camp and he turned his friend over to a nurse in the hospital.

SUFFOLK REPUBLICAN SUPPORTS GOV. LEHMAN

Marshall Field 3rd, millionaire philanthropist, outstanding Suffolk County Republican and one of the most active supporters of the G.O.P. in the state, has written a letter to the Lehman-Poletti Independent Citizens Committee declaring his support of Governor Herbert H. Lehman.

Mr. Field's defection from the ranks of the Republicans was announced by John C. Kelly, Democratic campaign manager. Indications are that many other Conservative Republicans will follow Mr. Field's example before Election Day.

In 1934, Mr. Field headed a drive for a fund of $100,000 for the New York County Republican Committee. Always an active, strong Republican, Mr. Field's action was a tremendous blow to the Dewey forces.

Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of a former Republican governor of New York State, now a vice-president of the Lehman Poletti Independent Citizens Committee, who is making state-wide radio addresses for the election of the Democratic candidates, Governor Lehman and Charles Poletti.

Red Cross Volunteers Assist War Veterans

Red Cross workers in chapters, in hospitals and on posts of the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marine Corps, assisted 122,355 active service men or veterans or their families during the past 12 months.

Red Cross service to these men included such personal help as letter-writing, shopping and recreational leadership, but it also included financial assistance to their dependents, help in locating missing members of their families, and assistance in filing necessary applications for pensions, disability pay, hospitalization, or for discharge from active service because of home needs.

The average number of men assisted by Red Cross workers each month was 18,750, according to a recent report.
