Revolutionary Method For Treating of Cancer

Classic experimental subjects of cancer investigators are mice. On mice are tested serums, diets, X-rays, poultices—all manner of remedy and theory—before the treatment is made available for use on humans.
Two investigators who reversed this process are Drs. Temple Fay and Lawrence Smith of Philadelphia. They announced a revolutionary new method of treating cancer—the so-called "frozen sleep" treatment.

Working on the theory that cold would kill the growth of cancer cells in the human body, they packed cancer patients in cracked ice until their temperature dropped below 90—previously thought to be the lowest body temperature at which life could be sustained. Though the cold did not kill them, it put the patients to sleep, with their normal body processes dropping to a point near death. The patients were kept in their cold coma for five days.
The result of this treatment, declared Drs. Fay and Smith, was to check tissue damage caused by cancer and to promote healing in a number of cases.

Other successes were reported. Meanwhile, three cancer researchers in Santa Monica, Calif., decided to apply the treatment to cancerous mice. The report of Fritz Bischoff, Louisa Long and J. Jerome Rupp to the International Cancer Research foundation in Philadelphia disclosed that so far as mice were concerned, "frozen sleep" was a failure.
After subjecting mice to the cold coma (24 hours), it was discovered the size of the malignant growths in the mice had decreased, but only about as much as would have been expected by reducing the amount of food eaten. Most important, after a short time the cancer tumors regained their growth, thus proving the freezing had no permanent effect on the mice.

Dairy Industry to Make America Milk Conscious

Dairymen of America have availed to the fact that they are not getting their share of the nation's food dollar and they are going to advertise their product nationally.
Details of the campaign to make America a nation of milk drinkers were revealed by Dr. Robert Prior. "Dairying is America's largest industry," he said. "The sum of $3,500,000,000 is invested in cows and dairy farms with a cow population of $25,000,000. Yet this industry spent only $61,000 in advertising its products in 1939."
As a result, dairying is suffering from under consumption, he added. Surveys show that only 25 per cent of the adult population drinks milk steadily. A like percentage drinks it occasionally and 50 per cent are nonusers, he declared.
Dr. Prior is secretary of the Washington State Dairy Products commission.
The recently organized American Dairy association of which he is vice president proposes to raise a national advertising fund.
