This pooling of resources, this exchange of facilities, makes available to the nation the total power of its railroads. It spreads the transportation load evenly over all areas, saving labor and materials, speeding deliveries. But more than that, it illustrates a spirit of cooperation which not only helped build a great rail transportation system, but which has kept that system great, in war and peace, for long and profitable use by our people.

HOME PRODUCTION OF FOOD IS VITAL

To quote a recent trade journal "Every pound of food produced at home by a family for its own use helps to win the war!"

Labor for the commercial production of vegetables is short. Transportation facilities are hard pressed. The needs of our fighting men and of our Allies are additional to the normal demand.

Home gardening must increase if the average American family is to enjoy fresh vegetables this
