"When I get my around you, I'm at a loss for words. What shall I do?"

Once upon a time a bunch of witches rade their breems into Wm. Shakespeare's back yard.

They set a big black kettle on his outdoor barbecue pit and put a lot of old rubber tires, tar paper and high-test gasoline under and then rubbed a black cat the wrong way so the sparks just flew-and lit a fire.

When the kettle was boiling they threw in some meat they got from the local supermarket which made such a stink that the odor woke up William, who stuck his head out the window and hollered "Macbeth!"

Well Macbeth, who was the local cop, came and took the witches to Belmont so they could not make a big stink any more.

You see, if they had bought their meat here it would have smelled so good that they all would have had a midnight lunch and "Macbeth" wouldn't have been in it, 'cause Shakespeare would have hollered "Eureka," which is something entirely different.
