Pork Liver Helps in

Regulating Person's Nerves Pork liver, often neglected by the housewife, is worth almost its weight in gold in food value, according to nutritionists. Lean meat and liver of pork contain the B-complex vitamins — riboflavin, niacin and thiamine - which are essential in keeping the nerves on an even keel. So necessary are these regulating substances that even slight deficiency may result in "nerves." Other sources of supply are milk, cheese, whole grains and

When the family's nerves begin to get on edge, serve them a good meal of well-cooked pork liver, baked potato, green beans, whole wheat bread and milk, nutritionists advise. One serving, or a fourth pound of liver, whether it is fried, baked, canned or boiled, provides an excellent supply of the B-complex vitamins. Although brining and smoking destroy some of these nerve regulators, cured ham still is a good source of them. Pound for pound, spareribs supply lesser amounts than do ham or shoulder cuts because of the greater proportion of bone.

Only the lean meat and the liver of the hog, or about one-fourth its total weight, supply these nutrients. The remainder of the carcass has no value as far as B-complex vitamins are concerned.
