School Poem Of Long Ago Revived

A few weeks ago we received a letter from Miss Harriett Johnston of Seattle, Wash., who attended school here in her younger years, giving us a few lines that she could recall of a poem which Miss Mary Whenever I wish Snyder used in teaching the first grade and asked if we could locate the rest of the poem.

a number of people who remembered about the same number of lines of the poem as did Miss Johnston but couldn't go any further. However, Mrs. Dan Appier poem and another "jingle" of the same nature. Mrs. Appier had the and her sister, Miss Nora McAndrew, had used during their teach-

While searching for the poem a number of people whom we contacted also wanted to get a copy of it if we found it, so with the thought that others would like it to keep we are publishing both of

All this is my body, From my head to my toes, Made of skin, bone and muscle At the top is my head, With its covering of hair, Which all must remember To brush with great care. Here in front is my face Which must always look bright For a frown or a pout,

Would disfigure it quite. It has forehead and temples,... Two bright eyes and a nose, Brows, eyelids and lashes We must not forget those. My nose has a bridge . While here are my ears Which are placed at the sides.

Now my mouth has two lips As you very well know, With a little pink tongue, And pearly teeth in a row. All I hear and I see With my ears and my eyes Will help me each day To grow learned and wise. My mouth and my nose

Must do their work well, For how without these Could I talk, eat or smell. To the right, to the left, Now up and now down My neck bends my head And lets it turn around. The largest part here Is the trunk as you see

Which always reminds me That I am built like a tree. For here are my limbs Both upper and lower, Right and left of each kind I would hardly need more. Then the fingers and toes Spreading out like the twigs. There are ten of each kind Though they are not very big. In the trunk at the left Hear my heart pit, pit, pat.

Even when I'm asleep. Of this wonderful body There is much I can tell My shoulders, my elbows, My wrist joints as well. These help me move And bend as I please, I can do it with ease. Just look at my fingers, can move one and all. How bad it would be

If I'm waking or sleeping

My chest rises and falls

Watch my lungs how they swell

When I breath long and deep t always does that.

Were they stiff like a dolls. Back to back, palm to palm My hands I can lay. They are useful to me In my work or my play. Arm, forearm and hand Also the thigh, leg and foot On the latter, I stand. Now the elbow unites Arm and forearm you see While the thigh and the leg

Are joined at the knee. The ankle is found, Are slender and round. I must not forget One more fact to tell,

Besides ankles and knees, I have hip joints as well. My foot has an instep, A broad, spreading sole While five toes and a heel Just make up the whole. For standing, for walking, For running with speed My feet—doing bidding And go where I need. Much more might I tell

Of this body of mine. If only I might Take a little more time. But let us remember God meant us to make A strong man or woman If proper care I should take.

Jump out of bed And into the tub, Take—a cool bath Then---a brisk rub! Put on your clothes And do it with care. Now clean your nails And comb your hair. So white and clean, That you'll feel proud When they are seen. Peek into the mirror, Don't you look well? Now go to breakfast, There is the bell.

A good rule in planning a color scheme for a room is to use 50 per cent of the background color, 30 per cent of the second color and 20 per cent of the third color.
