Spring days usually mean more pressing and ironing, and here are tips for the most satisfactory care of your equipment. Protect the ironing board when it is not in use with a slipcover of plastic or closely woven

Keep the surface of your iron smooth and clean. To clean the iron, rub the pressing surface over a piece of waxed paper covered with salt or, while the iron is warm, rub its pressing surface with beeswax or paraffin wrapped in a clean sloth. If the cord is detachable, be sure to detach it before putting the iron away. Hang the cord away from the heat in a place that has no sharp turns to injure the wire, or coil the cord loosely and keep it in a drawer. Keep
