DROUTH result, which seem to have hit some states hard, are spotty in New York. While growing conditions for most field crops By MILLIONS As The have been most unfavorable yield per acre-prospects are good. Corn and winter wheat should be much the same as last year; hay, potatoes, dry beans, are down, with a sharp decline in oats. Fruits with the exception of peaches, are hardest hit, with the apple crop estimated to be five million bushels less than last year. Cherry harvest fell off and pears and grapes will be about one-tenth less than last year. Milk production per cow, always felt in dry times, has de-

VETERINARY Doctors from all over the state will mark sixty-one years of progress at their annual meeting at the Sagamore on Lake George, September 9 thru 12. Their contribution to a better agriculture has been on important one with advancement in livestock and poultry disease control. The N.Y.S. Veterinary Medical Society organized at Rochester in 1890, in addition to the statewide society with central offices in Utica, has ten affiliated associations across the state, including many women's auxiliarys. At the annual meeting Dr. J. L. McAuliff of Cortland will preside over a full program of recreation and instructive papers oy outstanding speakers from around the country, as well as the Veterinary College and College Agriculture at Ithaca.

GRANGE legislatives strength has been steadily growing. Counsel on a widening variety of subjects ın which agriculture has a definite stake is constantly sought by national leaders, who recognize the solid, considered opinions issuing from Subordinate Grange, up thru the state organization and on to National Grange, which shapes an informed policy which is refreshing for its lack of the "gimmes". In the weeks before us, with State Session scheduled for October 28 thru 31 at Saratoga Springs careful thought should be given to your Resolutions which will be presented to the delegates at that time. Your Legislative Committee should be especially busy these

Better Health For Children

A Community Service Issued Children's Hospital of Buffalo, N. Y.

Croup is the term applied to various forms of laryngitis in infants and children. It is distinguished by a hoarse, barkingsort of cough which is often accompanied by breathing difficulty. Croup may be serious and therefore the Children's Hospital recommends that a doctor be called promptly.

Spasmodic croup is the type most commonly seen. It generally develops in the evening without warning. The child may waken with a violent coughing spasm, fighting to get his breath. This is frightening to see but the chances are that it's not as serious as it appears. Call your doctor immediately and while waiting for him to arrive, the following emergency measures may be taken safely. The immediate need is warm, moist air, and the simplest, quickest way to get it to take the child into a closed bathroom and let the hot shower water run full force. If the water is not hot enough to produce steam, boil water in an uncovered saucepan close enough to the child so he inhales the vapor. Never hold a child close to the spout of a steaming kettle. Such a concentrated force of steam would scald him seriously. As seen the the child breaths the warm, moist air he will probably have noticeable relief.

When the child's sleeping room has been warmed, the air may be kept moist by an open pan of boiling water on a hot plate. To maintain warmth and moisture, doors and windows should be kept closed. It is advisable that someone share the room with the child for the next three nights to make sure it remains properly humid.

The more severe type of croup may appear suddenly at any time of the day or night. This condition requires close supervision by a physician. If the doctor cannot come to you, you should take the child to a hospital. Transport him in a heated car, providing protection from drafts by placing
