There is on substitute for blood despite fighting conditions described as "the worst ever," Americans GI's wounded in Korea are recovering at greater speed and in larger percentages than in World War II. Only 2.6 patients out of every word hospitals in Korea died later. According to offical medical statements the almost miraculous success in saving the lives of casualties is due the prompt use of blood plasma on the battlefield and also blood in military hospitals. Whole blood reduces shock, a blood lost through bleeding. "In the treatment of many battle casualties," says Dr. Richard J. Mailing, Director of Medical Services. there is no substitute for blood. Americans are rolling up their sleeves, yes, all kinds of people are giving blood so that our wounded may live. Right now the need for blood is urgent, in hospitals, at home, and over-seas. Many men require four and six transfusions during a delicate operation, and the blood must be there when it is needed. o give the most precious gift of all—the gift of which there is no substitue--your blood. It will flow back into the veins of a human being, give him a new lease on life and help him along the road of recovery. If you have already given blood you know that it is neither difficult nor distressing.
