How To Make a Dustless Duster With the approach of the holiday season, you'll propably be giving some thought to sprucing up your home for company. Here's a tip from the specialists at the State College of Home Economics that will make your duster. A dustless duster actually absorbs dust, instead of redistributing it on the surface.

Here's how you can make one. All you need is a quart jar with a screw top or a metal container with a tight lid, such as a coffee can; two tablespoons of furniture polish or liquid wax; and a clean

Pour the polish or wax into the jar. Turn the jar till its inside is completely coated; then pour out the extra polish. Roll up the cloth, put it in the jar, and cover. Let the sealed jar stand a day or two. When you take the cloth out, you'll have a dustless duster that won't leave an oily film on furniture. When the cloth becomes soiled, just wash it with synthetic detergent or soap, and repeat the treating process.
