Is Your Family A Family?

I have often heard students say, "They just don't understand me at home!" or "They never listen to any reason!" How often have you said it yourself?

There also are families that seem to have a very close family relationship. So, they must have some "secret" or rules that guide them in the family circle. But, what are they?

If you look deep enough, you discover that family relationship is what you make of it. It takes continual effort and consideration, but, it can be accomplished.

Most family arguments stem from the following questions. If you can honestly answer "yes" to them all — don't worry — you're an expert on families all ready. If you can't, the effort will tie you closer together.

1. Do I do my share of the work home?
2. Can I take disappointment without being babyish?
3. Do I enjoy being with my family?
4. Do I respect the privacy of other family members?
5. Do I try honestly to see my parents' viewpoint?
6. Do I refrain from nagging to get my way?
7. Am I a good example to younger members of my family?
8. Do I refrain from monopolizing the telephone?
9. Am I pleasant most of the time?
10. Am I mature enough not to get my feelings hurt easily?
