The Importance Of A First Job

When someone first begins looking for a job, he has many things to consider. He must think of the salary, general working conditions, requirements, transportation, and whether or not the job will suit his character and personality.

He must pick a job that he will be satisfied with for a long time and he must face this task seriously, for his first working experience may affect his whole life.

If and when he obtains the job he wants, he must still keep trying. Many people are not as inexpensive as they think they are. Too many people feel that they are doing their employers a big favor by working for them, but nowadays there are so many people looking for work that these people are often replaced by people with the same requirements but also a better attitude.

When going to work for someone else, a person must learn to cooperate and to work as a team with the other workers, and not attempt to gain recognition for himself. Therefore before you look for a job, find a good attitude to start out with.

SKI TIPS

#5 STRAIGHT SNOWPLOW

By Ace Manley
Director, Big Bromley Ski School

The straight snowplow is the skier's first exercise for controlling speed. But it is also the exercise used by most expert skiers for regaining control after attaining too much speed.

It is a good idea to practice the straight snowplow in conjunction with the straight downhill running position.

As the skier moves down the fall line in a running position, he pushes the tips into a V or snowplow position: the tips are together and the tails are apart (displaced at equal angles from the body).

The knees and ankles are flexed outward and the weight is equally distributed on both skis. This enables the inside edges of the skis to grip the snow equally as the surface of the skis form right angles to the lower legs.

As the skier moves, his hands are held by the sides and the skis are allowed to slide forward. By pressing the tails of the skis a little further apart and letting the knees come together very slightly, even more control over speed is achieved.

The final movement is allowing the skis to run back together into the straight downhill running position.

Like other exercises, the straight snowplow should be practiced repeatedly before the skier advances to anything more difficult.

SKI TIPS

#6 SNOWPLOW TURN

By Ace Manley
Director, Big Bromley Ski School

After learning how to control speed, the skier is ready to study direction—how to control it and how to change it when he wants to. The natural starting maneuver for this objective is the snowplow turn.

The skier begins in the straight snowplow position in the fall line and transfers his weight toward one ski, which becomes the outside ski of the turn. At the same time, he drops the same outside shoulder of the turn.

The shoulder always moves in the direction opposite the turn. In other words, the left shoulder is dropped for a right turn and the right shoulder dropped for a left turn.

Another way to remember this is: the shoulder is dropped slightly back and over the ski that is pointed in the direction in which the skier wants to turn.

The knee is flexed slightly more forward on this downhill ski, giving a power of direction or turning power to the ski. Nevertheless, the tips of the skis remain in the straight snowplow position. And the body is not twisted in the direction of the turn. The upper body is simply angled over the weighted ski. The hands are held at the side.

When the skier is ready to change direction, he merely rises up slightly, dropping the shoulder back and over the other ski, pointed in the direction of the turn.
