On this day, the importance of a well organized high school paper in improving the early education of tomorrow's journalist is emphasized. Its goal is an intelligent high school press with emphasis on good writing.

Over 3200 entries were received in this year's competition coming from more than 20 states. Greenwood's school paper, the Fulcrum, is only three years old. The school officials are honored that the paper was awarded first place in competition.

Jerry Burley, art editor, won a certificate of merit for his cover drawings.

Thirty students, accompanied by George Angello, club advisor made the trip.

The new construction and remodeling project at the Greenwood Central School is scheduled to start this week. Final arrangements have been worked out between the State Education Department, the architects, the School Board and the four low bidders, to begin work immediately. The bids for the project were opened on April 14 with the following contractors bidding. On general construction bids were received from Modern Construction Company, $265,647.00; L. C. Whitford Co., $266,000; Holland Lumber Co., The Plumbing contract bidders were J & K, $48,982; Kenneth Kemp, $42,145; Shriner, $39,999; and Ernest Wyand $38,749. Under the Heating and Ventilation contract bidders were J & K $74,218; American Warming, $66,880; and Shrine, $62,207. The bids for the electric contracts were Angelo Cilano, $41,900; Box Electric, $41,285; and Crum Electric, $36,987.

Since everything seems to be in order, contracts will be signed with the low bidders in each area of construction. The amount of the floor flow bids comes to a total of $387,787.00 since this is below the $397,000 which was authorized by the voters at the last annual meeting the school can accept these bids, sign contracts and proceed with the construction. It has been announced by the Board of Education that since the construction contracts were so close to the $397,000 authorized by the voters that it will be necessary to delete from the project certain items of materials and equipment in order to provide sufficient finances to pay the incidental expenses on the project. Incidental costs include architect fees, clerk of the works, legal fees, insurance, and a reserve fund.

The School Board has indicated that it would also take an advantage of a alternate on the swimming pool which would include an all stainless steel pool equipment and fixtures at a cost of $5500. A letter will be sent to the Greenwood tax payers and voters in the near future explaining all of the problems regarding the finances and a resolution will be voted upon at the annual meeting to allow certain items of equipment to remain in the building project as planned.

A job meeting of the general construction has been called for Friday morning at the school and at this time a time schedule and plans for completing the project will be tentatively worked out. A rough estimate of the project at this time would indicate that the bulk of the construction and remodeling should be completed in approximately six months.
