Does Your Driver's License Expire In November

About one million New York State motor vehicles registrations expire at the end of November.

Consequently, the Department of Motor Vehicles suggests that you check your own registration to see if it is among those marked for November 30 expiration.

The owners affected should have received their punch card renewal applications by now, since they were mailed from Albany several weeks ago. The Department urges that they be completed and either mailed or brought to the issuing office nearest the owner's residence as soon as possible.

If an owner does mail his renewal to a local office — and this is the correct procedure in most cases — he should be sure to include the renewal stub from his present registration, proof that he has complied with the inspection law, the name of his insurance company (not the agent), and the fee as printed on the application.

He also must sign the application in three places — on the back of Part 1 and the front of Parts 3 and 4. Owners do forget to sign, the Department says, particularly on the back of Page 1.

It is possible, for one reason or another, that some owners have not received the application by now. In this event, they should obtain a paper application from their local office and use that. It also is possible that the office may have the punch card application, if the postman could not deliver it to the owner's home.
