Lime Soils In Autumn

Add lime to soils in autumn, says Walter L. Haldeman of The Pennsylvania State University. Six months are needed for the limestone to completely react with soil particles.

According to a Penn State correspondence course on soil fertility and management, lime is added to farm and garden soils to neutralize acidity.

Acidity is an inhibitor of plant growth. Reduce soil acidity and plants are more able to reach high production.

Ninety percent of the liming materials used in United States is ground limestone. Farmers use it almost exclusively. It's entirely suitable for home gardens.

Apply ground limestone before plowing. Or, plow down half of it and harrow the other half into the soil after plowing. Mix it in the soil.

How much? Test the soil. County agents, fertilizer and lime companies do the testing. Without a test, put on one ton to an acre, or, five pounds per 100 square feet.
