The Advantage Of Knowing
 Two Languages

There are, of course, many advantages in knowing more than one language. The most obvious of these is being able to converse with people from other countries in their own language. Talking with foreigners in their native tongue not only facilitates matters, but also helps foreign relations. It is a compliment to a foreigner who is in this country on a temporary basis, such as business or pleasure. It gives the person a feeling that his country is important enough to us to learn its language. To an alien who is planning to stay, but does not yet speak English, an American who speaks his language can be of untold help. He might write back to the homeland telling his relatives and friends how helpful and kind the Americans are.

Another practical advantage of knowing a foreign language fluently is, of course, a job with the government translating between ambassador or a interpreter for the United Nations. Such a job is not only rewarding, but it is also patriotic and helping to further world peace. Of course, if you are planning to travel abroad, knowing a second language can be of great help.

Also, another reason, not vital but to which your second language can be put is nevertheless, helpful did you ever wonder what the Mexicans were really saying? Are they going to let the good guys go?

The endless list of the advantages cannot be even begun in a short discourse such as this. But if ever you plan to travel or have any contact with foreigners, knowing a second language is very helpful!
