Didn't Get A Punch Card?

The New York State Department of Motor Vehicles mails out registrations and license renewal applications a month ahead of the expiration date. However, sometimes the cards are not received by the applicants. If you don't receive your punch card by the 15th of the month of expiration, here's what you should do.
 First, call your nearest Motor Vehicle Office. Your card may have been returned and they may be holding it for you.
 If not, and you are awaiting a vehicle registration punch card, then you must fill out a paper application for renewal. If you are waiting for a license renewal, then you must fill out a DP-120 form at the issuing office. The office will issue an interim permit for your use while a new license punch card is prepared.
 In either case, the failure to receive a punch card does not release you of your responsibility to renew your license or registration.
