Gov. Rockefeller Proposes Amendment To Lower Voting Age to 18
 Governor Rockefeller has sent to the Legislature a proposed constitutional amendment to lower voting age to 18, declaring that at that age "by every relevant standard, young men and women today are ready and willing to assume the rights and responsibilities of full citizenship."
 "The indefensibly immature behavior of a scant fraction of our youth," he said in a statement, "must not obscure this fact or penalize the vast majority of American youth capable of exercising citizenship responsibly."
 "Today, the vast majority of New Yorkers between the ages of 18 and 21 complete high school," the Governor continued. "Almost 60 percent go on to college. They are educated for citizenship well before earlier generations."
 "A large percentage of our young adults are married and assume family responsibilities before age 21. Most of them work and pay taxes. From age 18 our young men are subject to the military draft. They carry the major burden of the fighting and dying in the Nation's battles. A man old enough to defend his Country is old enough to help determine the leadership whose policies affect his very life."
 Noting that individual legislators have submitted similar constitutional amendments, the Governor urged passage of the proposal "to bring our young people into a positive participation in the democratic process."
 The amendment would go on the ballot in November 1971, if approved by the Legislature this year and by another Legislature in 1971.
