ATTENTION! N. Y. S. Boat Owners

New York boat owners are penalizing themselves by failing to complete their applications for boat registration and renewals. Between 1,500 and 2,000 incomplete applications come in to the Registration Bureau of the Conservation Department's Division of Motor Boats every week, about 25 percent of the total number of applications being received at this time of the year.

By the time these incomplete applications are returned to the boat owner, come back to the Albany office and are processed, the delay in issuing the certificate of registration may be as much as four to six weeks according to Tom Meagher, Chief of the Registration Bureau.

Unfortunately all boatmen suffer from these delays, Mr. Meagher points out, because part of the force handling registration has to be diverted to handling these incomplete applications.

Registration which results in a separate check for each boat, to the boat owner, is a separate check for each boat, to the boat owner.

Generally, you'll do best using tiny midge dry flies or wet flies except during hatches. Now forget about how "difficult" it is to cast, and start catching!

The maples comprise one of the most popular and well-known tree groups in America. Among the native species in New York State are the familiar sugar maple, prized for its timber and maple syrup products, silver maple, red maple, boxelder, sycamore maple, and Norway maple. Maples like other trees, however, are subject to attack by many different insects and diseases that plague home owners.

The State University College of Forestry at Syracuse University has prepared a free, illustrated 26-page booklet titled, "Maple Tree Problems", designed to help individuals recognize and prevent the problems of the maple. This publication describes a number of conditions, their causes, and suggested tree maintenance.

Prepared by Dr. Howard C. Miller and Savel B. Silverberg, tree pest and disease specialists at the College, the booklet should be a beneficial reference for the property owner with maple trees. There are three important steps in evaluating maple tree problems:

1. Determine whether other maple trees in the locality, or immediate vicinity, show similar symptoms.

2. Determine whether the affected trees are growing under favorable conditions in regard to soil, water, and light.

3. Determine whether any unusual or special treatments, such as fertilizers, insecticides, fungicides, or weed and brush killers were used on or near the trees before the symptoms appeared.

One section of the booklet on general diagnosis of maple tree problems lists several symptoms for the property owner to look for. A chart identifies parts of trees, symptoms, possible causes, and page references for detailed coverage of various conditions.

Problems such as lightning-struck trees, illuminating gas concentrations, and chemical injuries are covered together with various insect and disease-related conditions.

Although many of the maple tree problems can be dealt with by the property owner, Miller and Silverberg point out that major improvements should be handled by professional tree specialists.
