BREAKFAST IS FOR THE FAMILY

Breakfast may be the most neglected meal in the United States. One can't prove that. But it's commonly known that many people simply do not eat breakfast, or if they do, they eat pitifully little.
 Most of the complaints I hear concern teen-agers. But now and then I find mothers worrying about even younger children.
 Well, let's look at the situation. Are parents getting the best example? Is Dad running off to work with too little time to eat a substantial breakfast? Is mother so concerned with weight control as to feignly assume she should skip or drastically minimize breakfast?
 Most of all, does your family ever sit down — all of you at the same time — for breakfast together?

Provides Family Unity
 Breakfast, in my opinion, can be one of the most important factors in building family unity. The only valid excuse I can think of for not sharing breakfast is the busy and conflicting schedules that various members of the family can be engaged in.

But you don't always have to settle, even for that.
 Since it's now summer and the kids aren't rushing off to school, why not eat breakfast together? You probably would if you were at a summer cottage. Give it a try, now, at home.

There must be, of course an atmosphere of courtesy and good humor. If necessary correct the going-to-bed-late habits of some of your family members so they can get up a little earlier to join the rest of you. One hardly expects, or desires, exuberant and effervescent brilliance at the breakfast table. But the morning grouch needn't be tolerated.

And Don't Worry
 And don't worry if everyone doesn't eat everything. Just set an attractive table. The kids can be asked to help. It will lend special occasion to breakfast and be good training too. Have fruit or fruit juice, milk, and cereal one day, eggs another, bacon or sausage, an occasional omelet or chipped beef in cream sauce, or waffles. Pancakes, or french toast are other alternatives.

If your husband bucks at the idea, remind him that business men increasingly are holding breakfast conferences — especially at conventions. So why can't the family get together? Good breakfast habits have a civilizing effect on all of us. And nothing starts the day better. Accident and work performance records, too, show real improvement both at work and at school when people switch to a good breakfast.
