The Long, Hot Summer

It seems that it was only yesterday that we said good-bye to all our classmates and, after wishing them a happy summer vacation, we rushed out those big front doors to go swimming, horseback riding, pruning trees or stacking shelves.

The effects of two months of separation have shown in all of us. Some of us have changed while others of us have stayed the same as when they left us last June.

The long, hot summer? This can hardly explain the last two months. The summer was short for all the kids as I'm sure it was for the parents and teachers who contend with us through the year.
