AN INSIDER'S VIEW OF THE NEWS by Vant Neff

Secret worry-spot - East Africa. Not everyone knows about the Marxist sphere of influence there. The Red Chinese have moved in with all the subtlety of the old Tong warriors.

The day of the "human black-mail" technique in strikes will perhaps soon be over. The Britons' unyielding attitude toward the electrical workers' strike forced the unionists to back down in their demands.

In New York City, right at the height of the holiday season, the town's 35,000 cab drivers pulled a strike. But the New Yorkers and visitors to "Fun City" never batted a chilly eyelash.

Pleasantly unexpected side effect of the strike: Without all the taxis glutting the streets, New York's famous traffic jams virtually disappeared. Surface transportation flowed smoothly.

It's one way of showing irresponsible labor leaders that the public does have a say in the matter. The unions don't hold all the winning cards all of the time.

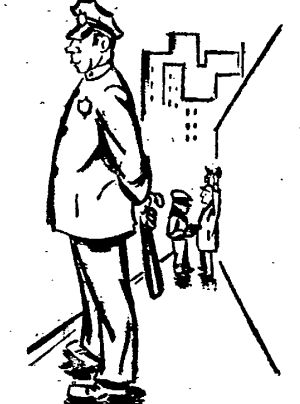

The taxi mess wasn't the only strike that plagued New York. The policemen called a strike, virtually crying to the citizens, "Damn the public safety—until we're paid more!"

Where does the money come from? Out of the public's pocket, naturally, in the form of higher prices for everything from a head of cabbage to a hospital bed. "Fun City" isn't so funny anymore. And it's a lot more expensive.

While Manhattan is an island, the strike disease that affects it may spread like a cancer all throughout the country. Hardly a city or town can escape its financially disastrous consequences.

An unanswered question that still puzzles me: Why hasn't the press publicized the fact that the Black Panthers filched $20,000 which had been donated to their "Breakfast Fund for Poor Kids" program and used the money as bail to spring Panther Supreme Commander Huey Newton?

Are you an expert on open heart surgery? Few people are, yet you'd be surprised at the number of "expert" opinions on it. The same might be said of the highly controversial SST jetliner.

In some quarters it has been theorized that the proposed high-speed supersonic jet plane would create an unbearably loud sonic boom. Certain individuals have projected the possibility that the SST might disturb the earth's atmospheric envelope, deteriorating our environment for living.

The important question to be considered, in my mind, is this: Can the United States possibly hope to maintain its quality of technological leadership and capabilities, if the SST is shelved? Russia, France and Great Britain are already deeply involved in their own SST programs. The Russians are seeking to have world airlines purchase supersonic jetliners from them. Wouldn't we be remiss, as a nation, with all the tremendous opportunities we have, to find ourselves way behind the rest of the world in scientific development? We were asleep at the switch in space technology, until the Russians' Sputnik shot gave us a rude awakening. Frankly, I think that we should accept the recommendations of the qualified experts on the SST and go ahead with our program at once, and maintain our superiority.

Do you know why union men scramble and struggle to become "leaders"? Recently, I stopped at a hotel where the "leaders" and elected officials of a mammoth union were holding their annual convention. How they lived it up would put the Onassis crowd to shame: Ultra-posh accommodations, multi-course gourmet meals accompanied by the finest of beverages and plenty of them; the wives leaving not a fur coat nor a diamond unturned to not merely keep up with, but out-Jones, the Joneses.

Merriment and social conviviality punctuated the business meetings with regularity. (Or was it vice versa?) I don't know what the total tab would be for a big, weekend-long bash like this. Neither, I suspect, do the rank and file union members whose dues actually footed the bill for it. No doubt the labor leaders and their ladies who were living it up like kings were satisfied that the working stiff they "represent" owed them all the luxuries their union's ample treasury can afford.

With compulsory union membership forcing millions of Americans to join or remain union members whether they want to or not, isn't it time for closer government regulation of this giant monopoly?

The entire free world mourns the senseless extermination of over six million Jews. But there are far more than six million living Lithuanians, Latvians, Estonians, Czechs and others who are still held in political bondage. While we have every sympathy for them, the world has seen that more fists cannot win against tanks. It seems virtually impossible to give them any practical assistance, but their courage and fortitude in the face of Communist tyranny should be a reminder to everyone who takes his freedom for granted.
