The Hi-Herald

Editorial

by Jeanne Atwell

Thanksgiving is the day devoted to giving thanks. It is a peaceful day, during which families unit over a plentiful meal. Just as people have changed since the first Thanksgiving celebrations, so have the meals. I thought it would be interesting to compare a Thanksgiving meal from the 1700's with one which we enjoy today.

On Thanksgiving Day in the year 1790, a family sat down for their meal in the old Sturbridge House, Massachusetts. Their meal consisted of: Cranberry juice and oyster stew, roast turkey with cornbread and sausage dressing, mashed turnips, winter squash, baked potatoes, succotash, peach pickles, chowchow relish, and small creamed onions, corn sticks, golden cider, cream-of-tarter biscuits, hot mince pie, pumpkin pie and marlboro, g. pie and finally nut bowls and cheddar cheese. Had enough? I think I have.

I guess you see that there has been a slight change in the menu for Thanksgiving over the generations. I thought that we had a variety of dishes, but compared to the menu above, ours is rather simple. One of our meals might consist of: roast turkey with dressing, potatoes and gravy, corn, squash, pickles, different types of breads, fruit salad, pumpkin pie and mince pie. Have I left anything out? Probably, but at least you got the idea.

No matter what you have to eat the meaning of this holiday is still the same. The meal is different in each home, but this doesn't mean anything. However, I have the feeling that Thanksgiving no longer carries the meaning that it should. So, on Thanksgiving Day before you put the first forkful of food into your mouth, stop and give thanks. There is a much deeper meaning to the holiday.

Senior Interview

by Kim Richardson

In the Senior Class there are forty-seven students. Out of these forty-seven we're going to single out William Crosby Buchholz.

Bill is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Buchholz. He has a sister, Kathy, and two brothers, David and Earl.

This year Bill is taking auto mechanics at BOCES in Belmont. He plans on being an auto mechanic when he graduates.

I'm sure that all the students wish Bill good luck in whatever he does.
