Editorial

Did you hear the latest gossip? It so, let's hope it stopped with you and that contagious disease of the mouth was killed on the spot. Rumors are one great fault in our school and community, and, with the size of both as small as they are, these things tend to spread like fire. In fact, they sometimes get as hot as fire, too.

Hearsay can be a dangerous thing to deal with. Unless the story comes from the parties involved directly, it's really not worth repeating. And why should anyone want to repeat it anyway? There are times when a person confides in another with the intentions of it travelling no farther than to that person. Nothing can destroy trust as fast as a story blown out of proportion that was told in the strictest confidence to a friend.

People are entitled to a certain degree of privacy and this privacy is directly invaded when some exotic, exaggerated story somehow gets back to that person's ears. There are few things as aggravating as having to listen to a group whispering this and that about "so-and-so" doing something or other with "what's-his-face", when you know perfectly well the facts have been folded, bent and mutilated. Then you want to say, "No that's not how it was", only you have your story based on a little concrete evidence as they. Even if the right true to fact story was presented, people tend to hear only the parts they want to hear and add their own finishing touches.

What can we do to stop this flow of slander and garbage? It gets out of hand and has hurt too many innocent people. It will hurt more people and ruin more relationships yet, if it isn't stopped somewhere. The best place to start is with yourself. Just don't listen, or if you listen don't spread it. Then get brave and daring by hitting the source before the rumors get too involved. Don't be afraid to turn it off by walking away or even telling them you don't want to hear and changing the subject. Make it stop with you. If no one listens, rumors can't be generated, and if rumors aren't spread by word of mouth, rumors don't survive and neither does the harm they bring.

Swimming

by John Davis

With the Sectionals coming up, Andover has been working hard to get ready, and it showed up in the last two meets of the regular season. On February 3 Andover was host to Naples. Russ Godown gave a spectacular performance in the 60 and 100 Freestyle, breaking the school record in each. Russ swam a :31.5 for the 60 and a :55.7, only two-tenths of a second from breaking the pool record, in the 100 Free. John Davis broke the school record for the 500 Free, with a 6:29.4. Marty Grossman also took first place in the 100 Backstroke.

On February 6, Andover was host to Canisteo. Andover took 1st places in the 600 Free and 100 Free by Russ Godown, 100 Back by Marty Grossman, and 400 Free-style Relay, Chris Mattison, John Davis, Marty Grossman, and Russ Godown. Marty Grossman also broke the school record for the 160 I.M., with a time of 2:00.4.

Congratulations boys on a fine season.
