MAPLE BITS

2 cups fancy maple syrup
¼ cup butter
½ tsp. baking powder

Boil to 280°. Pour without scraping into well-buttered shallow pan floating on cold water.
As soon as edges cool fold into center. When cool enough to handle pull as for taffy. When pulled stretch into rope and cut into bits with scissors. Put aside until the next day; when these taffy pieces will become the creamiest "bits" ever.

the late run

The man looks tired.
He needs a rest.
His smile comes slow,
His face is drawn.

For several days
He's done his best
To tend his vat
From dawn to dawn.

The syruping shack
Is of weathered boards.
It stands without a door.
The room is heavy
With its fragrant mist.
Trampled ashes make a floor.

It's no cheery place,
For all the fire's glow.
It's mud and work,
More mud and snow.

Black winds the trail
Among the stones
As the laden sledge returning Groans,
Behind the tractor,
Slowly crawling,
To save its hard-earned
Load a mauling:

Leg-weary, boot-heavy,
The man climbs off
And runs the sap
From tank to trough.

From off the vat
The vapors rise
Fragrant with maple to the skies.

And we marvel the miracle
Of the maple run,
The skill and toil
With which it's done,

Of dripping tree
And heavy boot,
The tall old chimney
Stained with soot,

The work on slippery
Muddy floors,
Hissing steam
And slamming doors.

Like crucibles tended
By alchemists old,
Who strove to turn
Base lead to gold,
The fire with its flickering light,
By magic of its heat
And by virtue of its might Blends the sap of the maple tree
With the labor of men like you and me
To make a nectar all its own
That no other plant on earth has grown.
A syrup sweet, with a flavor rare
Fit for the best man anywhere.
