That Shiny Green Bug Is Probably A Japanese Beetle

A shiny, metallic green beetle that devours roses is the Japanese beetle, and it is making its annual appearance now in New York State.

These beetles spend about 10 months of a year in the ground and emerge around the middle of summer to feed on leaves, flowers, and fruit of plants and trees exposed to bright light, says Ms. Carolyn Klass, Cooperative Extension specialist in entomology at the N. Y. State College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, Cornell University.

Active on warm sunny days, the beetles move rapidly from plant to plant chewing the tissue between the veins of a leaf, moving on ripening fruit and eating the silk of corn as fast as it grows. They especially like rose flowers and grape leaves. More than 275 different plants are attacked in the United States.

First found in New Jersey in 1916, the beetles have spread to southern Maine in the north, southward into South Carolina and Georgia, and westward into Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, and Missouri.

During the 10 months spent in the ground in the form of a white grub, they feed on the roots and underground stems of plants, particularly grasses. They frequently do serious damage to lawns and often go unnoticed until dead patches appear.

Ms. Klass says the beetles and grubs are controlled naturally by a milky disease and by parasites, and a dry summer helps suppress them. A wet summer encourages development of eggs and grubs, and increased numbers of beetles usually appear the next year.

The milky-disease which kills the grubs is available to homeowners since it has been incorporated into a dust by manufacturers. The dust can be applied to lawns for control of the pest.

The foliage and fruit of most plants can be protected if necessary from the chewing beetle by spraying with carbaryl, Klass advises. All parts of the foliage must be covered and more than one application may be necessary especially if heavy rains occur.

When the insecticides applied to edible plants, Klass warns gardeners they must observe the required waiting period between the last application and harvest. The waiting time is specified on the container label.

When only a few plants are attacked, the beetles can be knocked into a jar or bucket containing water and a little kerosene. This must be done every day, preferably early in the morning when it is cool and the beetles are quiet.

Klass says beetles are active for four to six weeks and then they gradually disappear, but some may be seen until frost. Gardeners having a particularly bad problem with them can seek advice from their local county Cooperative Extension agent.

Alfred University Receives $2,000 Grant

Approval of a National Park Service grant-in-aid of $2,000 to Alfred University has been announced by Parks and Recreation Commissioner Otis Lehman. The funds, matched by Alfred University, will be used to prepare a historic structure report on the University's Allen-Steinheim Museum.

A huge stone and mortar structure, the Steinheim is a one-of-a-kind creation built from a multitude of natural materials. Conceived by Johnathan Allen, second president of Alfred, as an eternal showcase for his varied curiosities, the mineral, geological, natural and man-made curiosities, the structure evolved without any set plan. The castle-like structure grew from its foundation in an erratic manner and incorporated in its walls more than 8,000 rock specimens while the interior wood work includes more than 700 samples of local and foreign woods. The structure itself is a part of the museum.
