CHANGES MADE IN TAP PROGRAM

A recent survey of American institutions of higher learning found that the average annual cost of a four-year education at a private college is now $5,110 and $3,654 at a public university.

As these costs have continued to mount — the cost is expected to go up another 6% next year — it has been a necessity for the legislature to revise the state's Tuition Assistance Program substantially.

The new law will accomplish the following:

- * increase the maximum award for students entering college from $1,500 to $1,800;
- * increase the minimum undergraduate award from $100 to $200;
- * include the $25 State University College Fee in tuition costs eligible for aid; and
- * increase the maximum award for undergraduate dependent and emancipated students with dependents from $2,000 to $2,700.

The new TAP procedures also include some measures to more closely monitor the use of TAP funds. These new requirements are along the same lines as proposals made earlier in the session and include:

- * removing TAP eligibility from students who default on their student loans;
- * requiring colleges to certify student eligibility on a fixed date;
- * requiring the State Comptroller to audit colleges and universities to make certain that they adhere to the financial aid statutes; and,
- * requiring that colleges and universities return any awards made on the basis of false or improperly certified statements of eligibility.

Some additional help for parents and students may be forthcoming from federal government. Congress is now considering a bill that would allow a tax credit up to $250 per student each year to help defray the cost of tuition. A House and Senate conference committee has now agreed on a final version of the bill to place before the full Congress.

If it wins congressional approval, the bill will go to President Carter but his decision on the measure is still in doubt since he has previously criticized such a tax credit proposal.

Recently the New York Association of Counties published its 1978 Legislative Score Card. This is an indication of how the 210 members of the Legislature voted in 1978 on a number of bills considered of particular importance to counties by the association. My score card showed that my votes were in line with the views of the Association of Counties on 10 measures listed in their bulletin.

This legislation covers everything from wage reporting to dog licensing and is designed in most cases to aid our counties in their continuing struggle to keep up with the financial burdens placed on them as government costs increase. I have always considered it one of the major jobs of a state legislator to aid our counties whenever possible by being that state agencies and state government in general do not overwhelm them with too many bills and regulations and costly mandates. This has been a major problem in recent years and the work of the New York State Association of Counties has meant a great deal in seeing to it that particularly our rural counties, such as those I represent, are able to function to the best of their ability to serve the public good.
